"Wire-tapping" on the internet should be illegal. This law would only be abused, much like the phone tap is. The internet is founded on freedom and community, and this law would only serve to break that up. Besides, if someone really wanted to keep information private on the internet, there are many ways to do so to circumvent anything the "taps" would do, including VPN, encryption, and other technologies.